PARIS, 19 Prairial, an 79.

TO MR. CATTEN.

In the name of the duty which unites against the oppressor it is the duty of all members of the Association of Workers to protest with all their force against an unparliamentary return of barbarity. The Commune is accused of all kinds of baseless, robbing and mutilation. Never has Paris been so proud as during the Commune. If during the only struggle against the soldiers of reaction and the police, they were not committed by the soldiers of the right to labor. There were some glances but in addition to those lighted by the torch, the Commune was not crushed by the janissaries of police, of despotism—the right to bury itself beneath its ruins, with the cry of "Vive la Commune!"

The Commune is the only power which has been able to create the world of the proletariat in the name of the people. We have opened the road; we have shown the way. There is no longer the power of the bourgeoisie, the struggle has commenced. We have shown you what the people can do. Forward and let us advance, by the ruin of society as it is at present exists, our brothers who have died in order to withdraw us from the yoke of our secular oppressors—priests, kings and capital. "Vive la Commune!" "Vive la République Sociale!"

MADRID, June 26, 1871.

The Presidents of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, after a long audience with the King, had an interview with the Ministers, informing the latter that the King refused to accept their resignations.

The Cabinet, which was in council until four o'clock this morning, however, decided to persist in its resignation, in consequence of the attitude of the majority in the Cortes. It is believed that only Moret and Zorilla will ultimately retire.

A majority of the Cortes have held a meeting today for the purpose of considering the King's refusal to accept the resignation of the Cabinet.

The majority decided not to change its programme and to maintain its opposition to the Ministry. A proposition to modify the address to the Throne, which led to the Ministerial crisis, was rejected.
